First Term English Exam

Part one : Reading and Interpreting

Societies of the past showed an exceptional respect for people among them who had the moral qualities they considered to be the most valuable in their philosophy. For example ; they used to regard courage as a feature that no other thing could equal. Loyalty either to one’s country or to the family and friends alise also acquired in their view a price that had to be hounoured by every member of the community. Other features like honesty, wisdom, generosity , intelligence and the readiness to sacrifice one’s life for some ideal or another used to be worshipped and the individuals possessing them much admired.

Today, important changes have affected nearly every nation in this field. As a result, the attitudes which have acquired the highest importance are quite different. For instance, people generally view the ability to make money and achieve professional success as attributes that hold the top level in this new evaluation. The faster someone amasses material possessions and turns into a wealthy person the more consideration he earns from his fellows.

In fact, talents like intelligence, creativity, preservance and originality are often relagated into a lower position and such a situation usually produces in the minds of the young, the eagerness to invest their hopes in music, sport and business because these spheres offer them much chance to get rich and famous quickly. Moreover,cheating , stealing and lying that used to be un forgivable are tolerate in this day and age.
